

The Little Cloud Who Learned to Share

High up in the bright blue sky, there was a small, fluffy cloud named Cora.

Cora loved floating all by herself. She kept all her soft, puffy fluff close and never shared her rain with anyone below.

One day, the sun shined brightly over a quiet little garden. The flowers looked droopy, and the grass was turning dry.

“Please, just a little rain,” whispered the flowers.

Cora heard them but floated away.

“I might run out,” she said softly.

As the day went on, the garden became even thirstier. The sun gave Cora a gentle nudge.

“Sometimes sharing helps everyone grow,” the sun said kindly.

Cora looked down again. The flowers were still waiting.

Taking a deep, fluffy breath, Cora decided to try.

Drip... drop... drip!

Tiny raindrops began to fall.

The flowers lifted their heads. The grass turned green again. Everything began to sparkle with life.

Cora watched in amazement. She didn't disappear — she felt even bigger and brighter than before.

Soon, a beautiful rainbow stretched across the sky.

Cora smiled.

Sharing didn't make her smaller — it made the whole world brighter.

Lesson :

Sharing helps others — and it feels good too.
